Characteristics of a Responsive Site

If layout grid is not flexible, the layout still adapts to screen size.
Media have a max-width (img, object, embed, video).
Forms have a max-width (form, input, textarea).
Media queries are used to target mobile, tablet and desktop layouts.
If no media queries are applied (typically for mobile), content is still accessible.
Javascript polyfill has been applied to the site for older browser support.
Navigation is fat-finger friendly at smaller sizes.
Meta tags have been added to standardize the viewport and screen width sizes.
Headings adapt to different screen sizes (font family and size).
Site has been tested at various screen widths at <http://mattkersley.com/responsive/>

Tester content and user accounts have been removed.
Permissions are correctly set for anonymous access to search and contact modules.
Pathauto has been configured for SEO-friendly URLs.
Footer includes copyright notice (or CC-license as appropriate).
